This paper presents a highly stretchable and mechanically responsive diode for neural interfacing. Such a diode is fabricated by doping polyethylene glycol (PEG) into highly porous polyurethane foam (PUR). Since the PEG in this polymeric matrix is highly conductive and maintains its conductivity even after stretching, the polymeric matrix becomes electrically doped. As a result, the PEG in the polymeric matrix is overstretched into electrical paths when the polymeric matrix is stretched. Thus, the conductivity of the doped polymeric matrix is highly stretchable. This intrinsic conductivity is controllable by the molecular weight of the PEG. For instance, when the molecular weight of the PEG is 4000, the PEG in the polymeric matrix has a high conductivity. When the molecular weight of the PEG is 2000, the PEG in the polymeric matrix has a low conductivity. A stretchable and highly conductive functional diode was fabricated. The highly conductive PEG layer could be used as the electrodes of the fabricated diode. The functional diode can be electrically stimulated in the stretched state due to the intrinsic conductivity of the PEG and the stretching effect. The stretchable diode can be
